

Instructions for the Child Support Worksheet

The calculation of a child support obligation for parents can be simple or complex. The resource page of our website, mkhansenlaw.com, provides you with a great deal of information regarding how child support is calculated and collected. Understanding how child support is calculated will be helpful to the mediation process. In order to calculate child support, I will need the following information:

INCOME

The Child Support Guidelines (“Guidelines”) require that “income” is derived from all sources, “except all means-tested public assistance benefits...”. (§ 4-204) Copies of the last two years tax returns together with all attachments, including all 1099’s and W2’s and two recent paystubs from all sources of employment are often used to determine income. The tax returns allow the parties to review and determine if there is income from other sources and/or if there are variations in income, such as overtime, bonuses, dividends, self-employment income, etc. If the parties agree that the exchange of current paystubs provides an accurate reflection of the parties’ current earnings, the parties may agree that there is no need to exchange tax returns. All information provided will be shared with the other party.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Health insurance (medical, dental, and/or vision) costs for the parents and children are factored into support, but in different ways. The cost of the children’s insurance needs to be calculated separate from that of the parents. The employers HR department or the insurance company can provide a breakdown of the cost of the health insurance. If you will need to get your own insurance post-divorce, obtain information regarding the cost prior to mediation.

CHILD SUPPORT FOR OTHER CHILDREN

The Guidelines take into consideration the support obligation for other children. If support has been court ordered, a copy of the order and calculation is needed. I can obtain this information if you provide me names of the parties in that action. If there are other children but there is no Support Order in effect, we can discuss this in mediation.

OTHER OBLIGATIONS RELATING TO SUPPORT

The child support obligation is only one of several support obligations relating to the children. Parents will share on a pro rata basis the cost of work and school related childcare, as well as out-of-pocket medical, dental, and optical expenses, and sometimes, extracurricular expenses as well. Parents with joint physical custody will share (pro rata) may more expenses. These will be discussed during mediation.

In summary, I will need the following information to properly prepare your child support calculation:

- Last two tax returns, including 1099’s and W-2’s, unless parties agree otherwise.
- Two most recent paystubs from all income sources (including information about frequency of pay periods), and information relating to bonuses, commissions, etc.
- A breakdown of the cost for your health insurance (medical, dental, and vision) and the additional cost to provide insurance for the children.
- The amount of child support paid for other children, if applicable.
